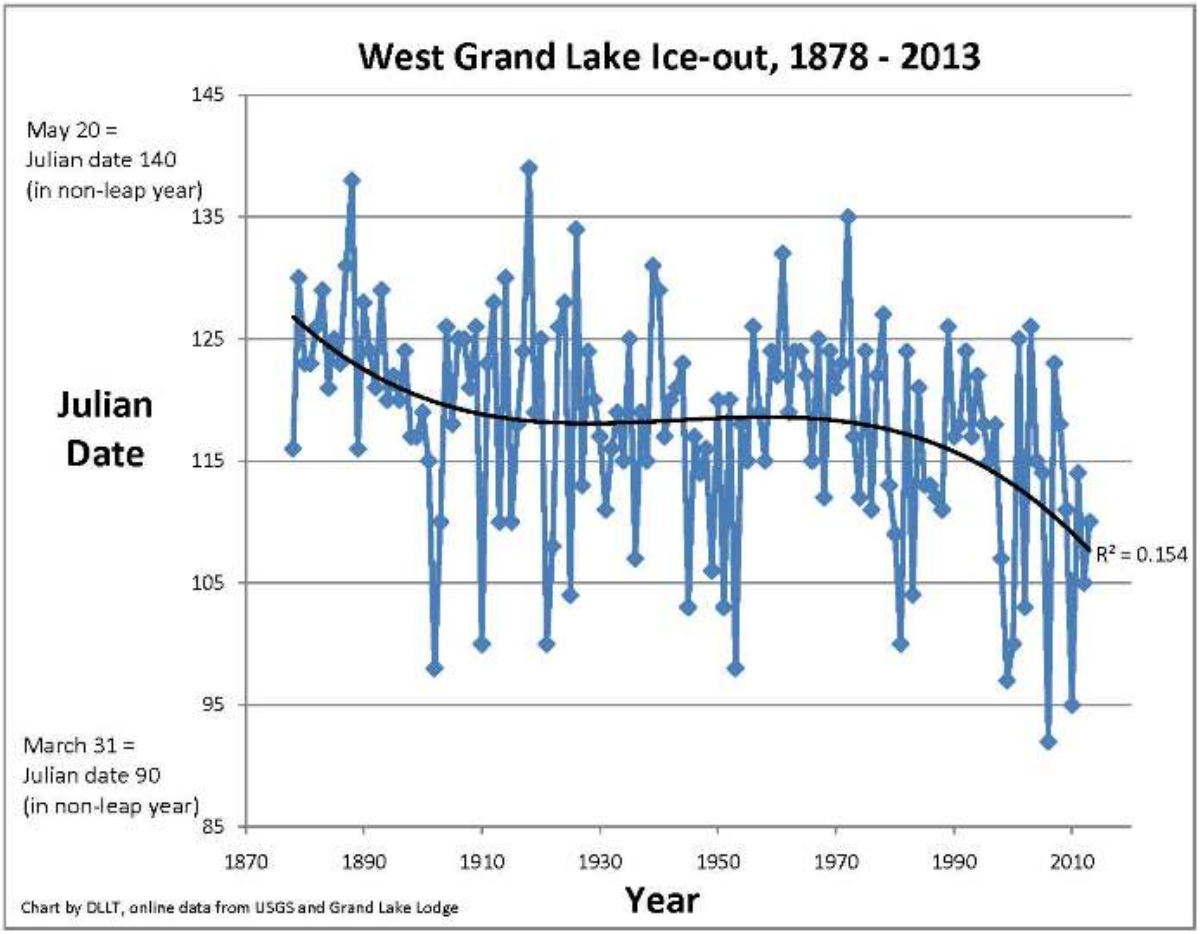
Downeast Lakes Landings



Marking Spring's Arrival to Grand Lake Stream

Spring officially starts in less than 2 weeks. On March 20th, the vernal equinox, we'll have equal periods of light and dark. Of course there are lots of other ways we mark spring's arrival.

Probably few attract more interest and attention in Grand Lake Stream than ice-out. With plenty of cold this winter, and some snow still on the ice to reflect the sun, ice out looks pretty far away. There's still good ice-fishing, snowshoeing, skiing, and snowmobiling now - but sun, warmth, and wind can change conditions fast.

Downeast Lakes Attracting Media Attention

If you missed these stories, use the links below to catch up!

In "Return to Daugherty Ridge" Art Wheaton writes for the Ruffed Grouse Society Magazine about a partnership with DLLT that is providing habitat for grouse, woodcock, and other wildlife that rely on patches of young forest.

North Cairn reported on DLLT's pioneering carbon offset project for the Maine Sunday Telegram on February 16, describing how our commitment to increase timber stocking has helped bring funding toward purchase of the West Grand Lake Community Forest.

Our carbon offset project was also featured by Elizabeth Wroblicka in Saving Land, the magazine of the national Land Trust Alliance.

Internship Opportunity - Still Time to Apply

If you'd like to spend a summer in Grand Lake Stream contributing to the conservation efforts of Downeast Lakes Land Trust through an internship: your application deadline is March 20th.

Passamaquoddy Place Names

On Feb. 20th, Downeast Lakes Land Trust was delighted to welcome Donald Soctomah, author and Director of the Passamaquoddy Tribal Historic Preservation Office, for an evening that explored the roots of human history in the Downeast region.

Mr. Soctomah led the attendees on a virtual journey through the lakes of the West Branch of the St. Croix River starting at Pleasant Lake at the top of the system... Read More
